Private Dining Rooms

Private Dining is available in a choice of the Hotel's historic rooms including the Constitution Room, George Moore Suite and St. Stephen's Suite. Each room overlooks St. Stephen's Green and has a unique story to tell whilst offering the ultimate in extravagance and exclusivity for your special occasion.

The Constitution Room

The Constitution Room is The Shelbourne's most famous room and is steeped in history. In 1922, The Shelbourne played host to its most historic meeting in room 112, under the chairmanship of Michael Collins, where the Irish Constitution was drafted. The renaming of room 112 as The Constitution Room commemorated this event. With the original antique table and chairs used for the signing of The Constitution, luxurious silk wall coverings, crystal chandelier and views overlooking St. Stephen's Green, the Constitution Room is perfectly suited for an elegant and inspiring occasion.

The George Moore Suite

George Moore, playwright and novelist, was born on 24 February 1852 in County Mayo. He immortalised The Shelbourne in his third novel 'A Drama in Muslin' – a study of the prevailing social conditions of the Irish people, who were desperate for political change and growth. With its opulent silk wall coverings and crystal chandelier, this room offers the ultimate setting for Private Dining.

St. Stephen's Suite

With stunning views overlooking St. Stephen's Green, the St. Stephen's Suite is named after Ireland's best-known Victorian park and also Europe's largest square. Silk wall coverings, a beautiful ornate ceiling and elegant chandeliers make the St. Stephen's Suite the perfect setting.

Culinary Philosophy

Garry Hughes, Executive Chef at The Shelbourne has a philosophy of using only the finest in locally sourced ingredients. His confidence with those ingredients ensure that guests enjoy a unique dining experience showcasing all that is best in Irish produce, fitting perfectly with the ethos of Ireland's flagship hotel.

The Shelbourne Hotel is awarded with two AA Rosettes for culinary standards and five AA Red Stars, underpinning an unforgettable dining experience.
