MIDLAND

The Midland Grand Hotel, now the home of the St. Pancras Renaissance Hotel was conceived as an iconic place of luxury for travellers coming to London from the north. The Midland Grand Hotel took five years to construct and involved the skills of numerous builders, stonemasons, artists, craftsmen, and tradesmen. During this period nine stonemasons were employed to carve the legion of capitals, headstops and gargoyles that decorated the building inside and out. In the Dining and Coffee Room (now The Gilbert Scott Restaurant), pillars of polished limestone lined the walls, their gilded capitals carved with conkers, pea pods and bursting pomegranates.

In homage to our great building this wedding package includes the following options:
